Dear Doctor,

- Migraine is the most common and disabling primary headache disorder with a substantial socioeconomic burden.
- Migraine management is multifaceted and is generally dichotomized into acute and preventive strategies, with several treatment modalities.
- The primary aim of acute pharmacological care is to restore function as soon as possible with minimal recurrence and side effects. The pharmacological treatment is based on the individual, considering the migraine attack characteristics, the patient's concurrent medical problems, and treatment preferences.
- In this exclusive video, Dr. Sumit Singh discusses the newer treatment options in managing migraines with suitable examples.
